WASHINGTON, Jan. 11

/PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- As demand for employees with government and military experience soars, FOSE 2007 will host over 2,000 candidates for interviews at the TECHEXPO @ FOSE career fair. Over 75 defense contractors, federal agencies, and government service companies, including Lockheed Martin, General Dynamics, Northrop Grumman, EDS, BAE Systems, and L-3 Communications, will interview applicants for thousands of currently available positions. The job fair will take place during the first two days of FOSE 2007 on March 20-21, 2007 at the Washington DC Convention Center. There is no fee for job applicants to attend TECHEXPO @ FOSE.

"FOSE 2007 will draw over 15,000 well trained technology professionals from government, industry and the military," said Bill Howell, Vice President and General Manager, 1105 Government Information Group. "TECHEXPO @ FOSE gives our attendees a richer experience. Not only can they visit over 550 exhibiting companies to stay on top of where technology is going, but they can also advance their careers by stopping by the job fair for on the spot interviews."

"There are numerous online job sites, but nothing beats a handshake," says Bradford Rand, President and CEO of TECHEXPO. "Employers will be able to interview hundreds of candidates each day and return to their offices with a good selection of qualified candidates. FOSE attendees benefit by conducting months worth of interviews in a single day, saving them time and money in their search for a new career path."

Now in its 31st year, FOSE 2007 will take place on Tuesday - Thursday, March 20 - 22 at the Washington DC Convention Center. Registration is free for military, government, government contractors and educators, with valid ID, and $50 for business and industry. For complete details, go to <http://www.fose.com>.
